Abstract of the Disclosure

An apparatus for the characterization of pigmented skin lesions, including an imager to acquire a plurality of images of the lesion, the images acquired with lighting at different wavelengths, and an information processing device to (i) process the acquired images with a neural network against results obtained from similar processing of known cases, and (ii) vary the weighting of each parameter supplied to the neural network on the basis of the results.